INTRODUCTION The current edition of Digital Control Systems (DCS) has built upon the substantial interest shown in the previous two editions of this popular textbook. The text is written for students preparing for a B.S. degree in electrical and computer engineering, computer science, or industrial engineering, as well as for graduate students enrolled in several branches of electrical and computer engineering or computer science. It is also suitable for use in courses on integrated circuits and digital circuit design. In this course, you will develop a thorough understanding of the logic of digital circuitry, analog circuit design, and the control of digital circuits and systems. To this end, a thorough review of digital logic, voltages and currents, some important considerations in circuit design, basic digital circuit techniques, analog circuit design techniques, and electronic and computer engineering fundamentals is presented. To present the subject in an integrated manner, you are encouraged to apply all the concepts taught to design a circuit and system from the design of basic components to the design of a complete system. In addition, the book is designed to support the objectives of each of the three courses mentioned above. Features. Please share this page for others to download the book. Ahh, so you are asking about the other, well known, question that many of you have: how much do we charge? Well, here is how we compute that: Our rates vary based on the complexity of the work you need done, and on how many people will be involved. The first thing we always ask is how many people you need to do the work. For single people, this is not a concern. For two people, things become more complicated. Three people, we have to ask ourselves how they will work together. No matter how many of us are doing the job, there are only so many hours in a day. Depending on the work and other commitments, we typically charge somewhere between $90 and $150 per hour of service. This is somewhat expensive, of course, but we want to create a situation that allows us to earn a decent living. Since you're going to spend your time working on our house, you'll know how long it takes us to complete the work. If you decide that you need a little extra help, we charge one-half of the cost of our hourly rate for each additional person. For example, if we ask for $150 per hour, and we think that you need help, we will charge you $75 for the first person and $75 for the second. We are not afraid to ask for a few bucks more, however, in order to ensure that we can have a home that you will enjoy. That's why the rate of $150 per hour is not our final decision – that is just a starting point. If we do the work, and you want to add on something extra, we'll certainly agree to it. After all, what we are going to do to your house is potentially going to make you happy.Q: Убратъ флажок чере f678ea9f9e
